It is the duty dition of affairs and remedy it by your action if possible to do so." The charge of Judge Stout is timely. Within the history of the State there has not been history of the State there has no the state has not been history of the State there has no the state ha witnessed more vagrancy than now pre- erate gavalryman, and collector of cusvails in all its towns and cities. It would be better for the industrious the day, and he will see from 15 to 50 trates except one. able-bodied idlers sitting on curbstones or lazily lounging in a friendly shade. Barring street loafing, the women of this class are worse than the men. Not one out of 100 betakes herself to an honest employment. Depending wholly on a friendly climate, nightly visitato truck patches and chicken roosts, small pilfering, the small revenues from licentious practices, varied only with an occasional odd job, these dissolute creatures have become an absolute moral and physical stench. They should be wiped out, and that speedily. We have a fairly good vagrancy law, but it is not enforced. No law is ever enforced unless there is a healthy public sentiment back of it. It is a hopeful sign that the circuit judges in the State are taking notice of the growing evil. Punishment, and severe punishment at that, furnishes the only hope orderly people may have that these thieving idlers can be thinned out. While the present law does tolerably well, it falls far short of being what it should be. The last Legislature had a good opportunity to enact a good lawa law which prescribed the whipping post for the second offense of vagrancy; but the grannies of that astute body of statesmen were frightened from a plain line of duty by the apprehension that some long-haired, etherialized humanitarian would scream out that Kentucky had gone back to the slave driver's lash. A vagrant cares but little for a short sentence to the county jail or the meagre work he does on a rock pile. Put the lash to him and he will mend his ways or leave the country! But since this can't be done under the existing law, we must be content to sustain our courts, supperior and inferior, as we'll as our ministerial officers in every proper effort to rid the country of vagabondage. When the rigors of winter come, many of the worthless idlers nell a $20,000 bank roll, and the trainer will come around begging alms, and those who don't will impose upon each yearlings. householder the necessity of double-

Concerning wit we append the following from Mr. Campbell's pungent pen to show that "as a wit he is it:" "Did you ever eat a paw paw? We did, in our callow youth—but that is another story—only it is a long time between eats."

THAT mobs are almost invariably composed of cowards is shown in the following sent from Winchester: "The expected mob to lynch the Negro rapist, Sam Hisle, formed on the Colay pike, about three miles from the city and stood there several hours. Want of leadership prevented an attack on the jail, which was heavily guarded, and Sheriff McCord's announcement that he would defend the prisoner to the last extremity probably cooled the ardor of the mob." Had the peace officers of Clark county shown carelessness about protecting Hisle the laws of the State would again have been cheated. Three cheers for McCord!
